1. In co-dependency, my good feelings stem from you liking me;
   In Recovery, my good feelings stem from me liking me.
2. In co-dependency, my good feelings stem from your approval;
   In Recovery, it’s self-approval that determines my good feelings.
3. In co-dependency, your struggle affects my serenity;
   In Recovery, your struggle matters because I care about you, but it does not control how I feel about myself.
4. In co-dependency, my self-esteem is bolstered by solving your problems, relieving your pain;
   In Recovery, my self-esteem comes from solving my problems, sometimes experiencing my pain.
5. In co-dependency, my mental attention is focused on pleasing you;
   In Recovery, I’m free to please me even when it may not please you.
6. In co-dependency, my mental attention is focused on protecting you;
   In Recovery, I protect me, even if sometimes you must protect yourself without my help.
7. In co-dependency, I may disguise my feelings, manipulating you to do it my way;
   In Recovery, I tell the truth about my feelings, regardless of the consequence
8. In co-dependency, my hobbies and interests are put aside; your hobbies and interests dominate;
   In Recovery, I pursue my hobbies and interests, even if that means spending time away from you.
9. In co-dependency, your clothing, behaviour and appearance are dictated by me, as you are a reflection of me;
   In Recovery, you dress, behave and appear as you wish, regardless of how it makes me feel.
10. In co-dependency, I am not aware of what I want;
    I ask and am aware of what you want;
    In Recovery, I am not only conscious of my own wants; I verbalise and take action to achieve them.
11. In co-dependency, my dreams I have for my future are all linked to you;
    In Recovery, my dreams are my own even if they do include you.
12. In co-dependency, my fear of your rejection determines what I say or do;
    In Recovery, my commitment to strength, hope and recovery determines what I say or do.
13. In co-dependency, I’m afraid of your anger, it determines what I say or do;
    In Recovery, I have no control over your anger and it has no control over me.
14. In co-dependency, I use giving as a way of feeling safe in our relationship;
    In Recovery, I can still give because pleasing you pleases me, but I want to receive as well. And that two-way connection has nothing to do with safety or fear.
15. In co-dependency, my social circle diminishes as I involve myself with you;
    In Recovery, I hope that you’ll like my friends, but if you don’t, I’ll understand.
16. In co-dependency, I put my values aside to connect with you;
    In Recovery, my values are mine, as the core of my being they are sacrosanct.
17. In co-dependency, I value your opinion and way of doing things more than my own.
    In Recovery, I value your opinion and procedures, but not at the expense of mine.
18. In co-dependency, the quality of my life is in relation to the quality of yours;
    In Recovery, the quality of our lives is separate, with clear boundaries separating the two.
19. In co-dependency, I tell everything right away, seek intimacy at the first meeting, and fall in love before I have any real information about who you are and what you can contribute to my life;
    In Recovery, I allow time and friendship to intercede; I am not overwhelmed by you and can discern inappropriate behaviour.
20. In co-dependency, when something needs to be done and no one is willing to do it, I automatically assume responsibility saying, “someone has to do it”.
    In Recovery, I operate from a position of choice, letting go, trusting to a Higher Power when circumstances dictate my saying “no” to someone else’s needs.
